

David's father was a theater teacher at his own private studio in Chicago. He first appeared on stage at age 3, and have been involved in theater ever since. He performed in community, as well as high school theater. After searching for a career, He realized I had missed the obvious. David returned to school, and received his teaching certificate. He taught for 13 year in Kildeer School District 96, creating their speech/drama elective, known as "Communications". He also directed 3-4 shows per year, and during that time he also taught at my father's studio, taking over after his retirement. He also taught drama enrichment programs at Stevenson High School.

After 6 years as a building administrator, David returned to the classroom as the Drama teacher at Northbrook Junior High School in the fall of 2007. he rewrote the 6-8 grade Drama curriculum, and started a program that paired general education students with special needs students, to create a special needs drama group. He also run a variety of Drama clubs.
